

COMMUNITY IMPACT SYMPOSIUM - RACE, JUSTICE, AND EQUITY

During this three-day Community Impact Symposium in Washington, DC, high school students from across the country will consider how to create positive, systemic change in their school or local community. Students will better understand the political and structural barriers to equity in our systems of education, health, or justice; identify various approaches taken at the local, state, and national levels; and work in teams to create a vision statement that incorporates their personal experiences and tangible action steps. The symposium will culminate with each school team sharing their vision with relevant administrators and community engagement experts at the 2023 NNSP Conference.

The Symposium will occur at the same time and place as the NNSP Annual Conference. Please visit the NNSP website for more information about how to register for the 2023 NNSP Annual Conference for educators.

About Us

The Close Up Foundation is a nonprofit, nonpartisan civic education organization dedicated to helping students develop the knowledge and skills they need to become informed, active, and engaged citizens.

The National Network of Schools in Partnership (NNSP) brings together public, private, and charter schools to focus on community engagement and impact by connecting what they study in the classroom to what is happening in the real world.

COMMUNITY IMPACT SYMPOSIUM: RACE, JUSTICE, AND EQUITY

How can our schools help build more just, equitable, and inclusive communities?

The Community Impact Symposium, a collaboration between Close Up and the National Network of Schools in Partnership (NNSP), brings together students from across the country in Washington, DC, to develop a shared vision of youth leadership, schools as civic hubs, and community engagement. The Symposium asks participants to grapple with a pressing central question: How can our schools help build more just, equitable, and inclusive communities?

Through engagement with experts and collaborative inquiry into their own schools and communities, students will consider their individual and collective responsibilities and agency, identify equitable practices in community engagement, and explore how the voices of other community members might shape their efforts to work towards justice. Finally, students will develop specific vision statements and action plans related to their own schools and communities, and present those plans to teachers, administrators, and other participants in the NNSP Conference.

Key Components

Homeroom Groups: Students will take part in daily discussions, debriefs, and feedback sessions with their homeroom, a core group of students led by the same instructor each day.

Equity in Community Engagement Panel: Students will learn from school leaders about best practices in community engagement and social impact as well as innovative approaches being employed by schools nationwide.

Community Engagement Deliberation: How can students more meaningfully engage the broader community in community engagement projects and program? Students will identify obstacles to community participation, consider strategies for involving more stakeholders, and develop proposals.

Community Engagement and Facilitation Workshops: Students will practice strategies and tools for understanding community issues, such as asset and power mapping, and skills for engaging multiple stakeholders and community members in solving community concerns.

Envisioning Community Leadership: In their homerooms, students will collaborate with peers to develop a shared vision statement that expresses how schools like theirs and students like them can help build more just, equitable, and inclusive communities.

Planning for Community Engagement and Leadership by School: Students will build on their experiences in the Symposium to develop specific plans of action for their schools and communities. These plans of action are distinct from calls to action; instead of saying "you should," students pledge "WE will."
